

Was Your Ancestor Really An Ape?

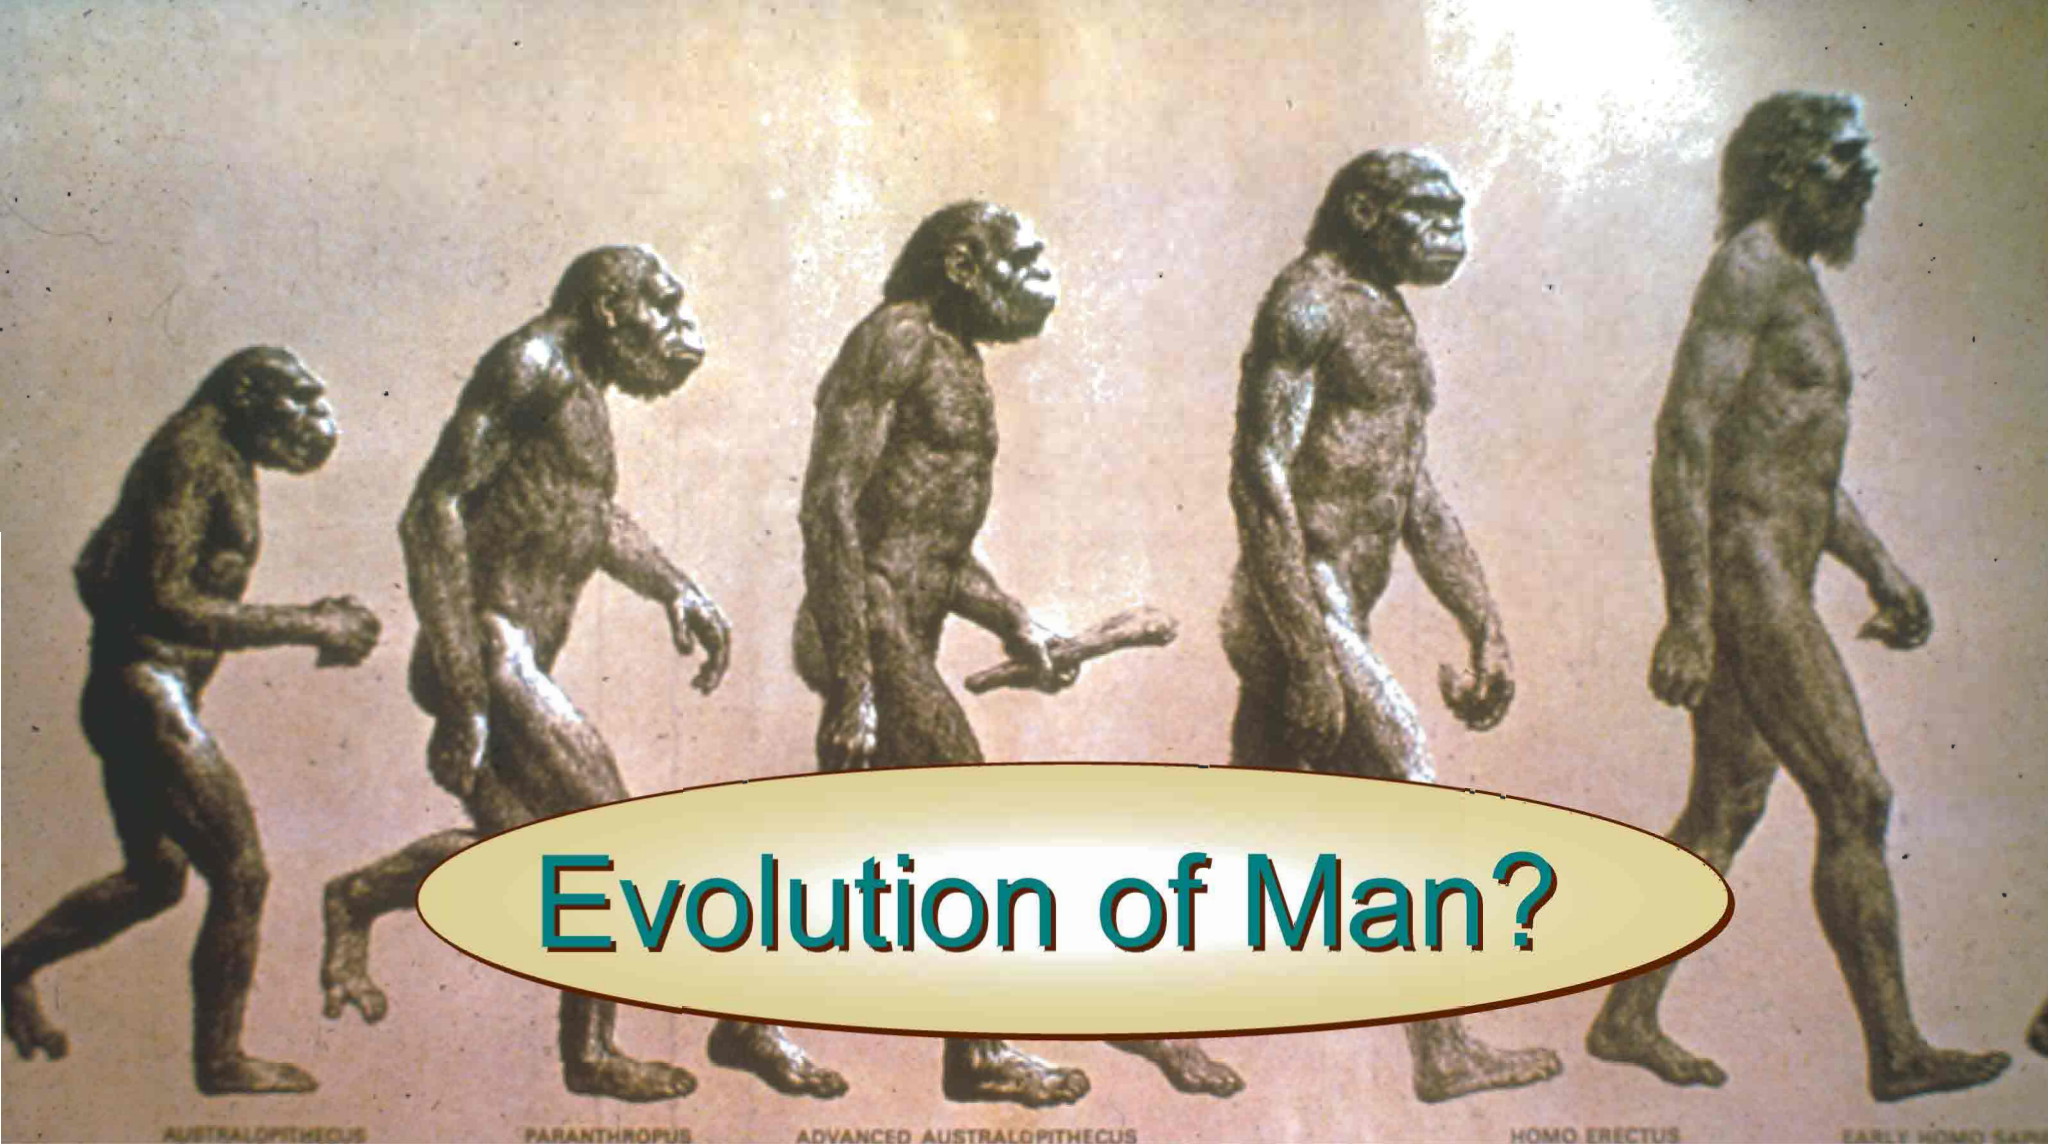

I would like to personally thank you for watching the Origins program. Origins was a special program, near to the heart of my late husband, Russell Bixler.

I trust that the information in this presentation will be helpful in your study of creation science. Thank you for your prayerful and financial support of Origins... you're making the television production of this program possible.

The Evidence:

- a piece of jaw
- two molar teeth
- a piece of skull

The Confident Interpretation:

“A discovery of supreme importance to all those interested in the history of the human race was announced at the Geological Society on Wednesday evening, 18 December [1912] ... a part of the jaw and a portion of the skull of the most ancient [500,000 years] inhabitant of England, if not of Europe ... the remains thus far recovered leave no possible doubt but that they represent, not merely a fossil man, but a man who must be regarded as affording us a link with our remote ancestors, the apes.”

It's hard to find someone who can draw a realistic-looking early hominid. That's why the Geographic's art department conducted a search for new talent. Four artists were picked to receive casts of two-million-year-old female Homo habilis fossils (left). From these bits of evidence they were to sketch—in skeletal and fleshed-out form—the hominid to whom the bones belonged. 'Each artist had two weeks with the bones before they were sent on to the next persons, says coordinator Kris Hannah.

'Research was completely up to the individual. That's why their work looks so different. There's no one way to draw her.'

Paleoanthropologists reviewed the results. Intrigued with all four entries, the art department has invited the artists to paint finished versions based on input from the consultants.

“There can hardly be any other subject so contentious as human evolution. Every fossil discovery, every new scientific technique that is applied, every speculation-all unleash a cascade of disagreements with unresolved and fiercely debated conclusions. ...”

John Wymer (archaeologist specializing in the Palaeolithic period), "Refreshing the evolutionary past," New Scientist, Vol. 136 (7 Nov. 1992), p. 40.

“Perhaps the most intriguing discussion is their attempt to define just when, where, how and why we are human.”

Wymer (1992), p. 40.

Human Variation

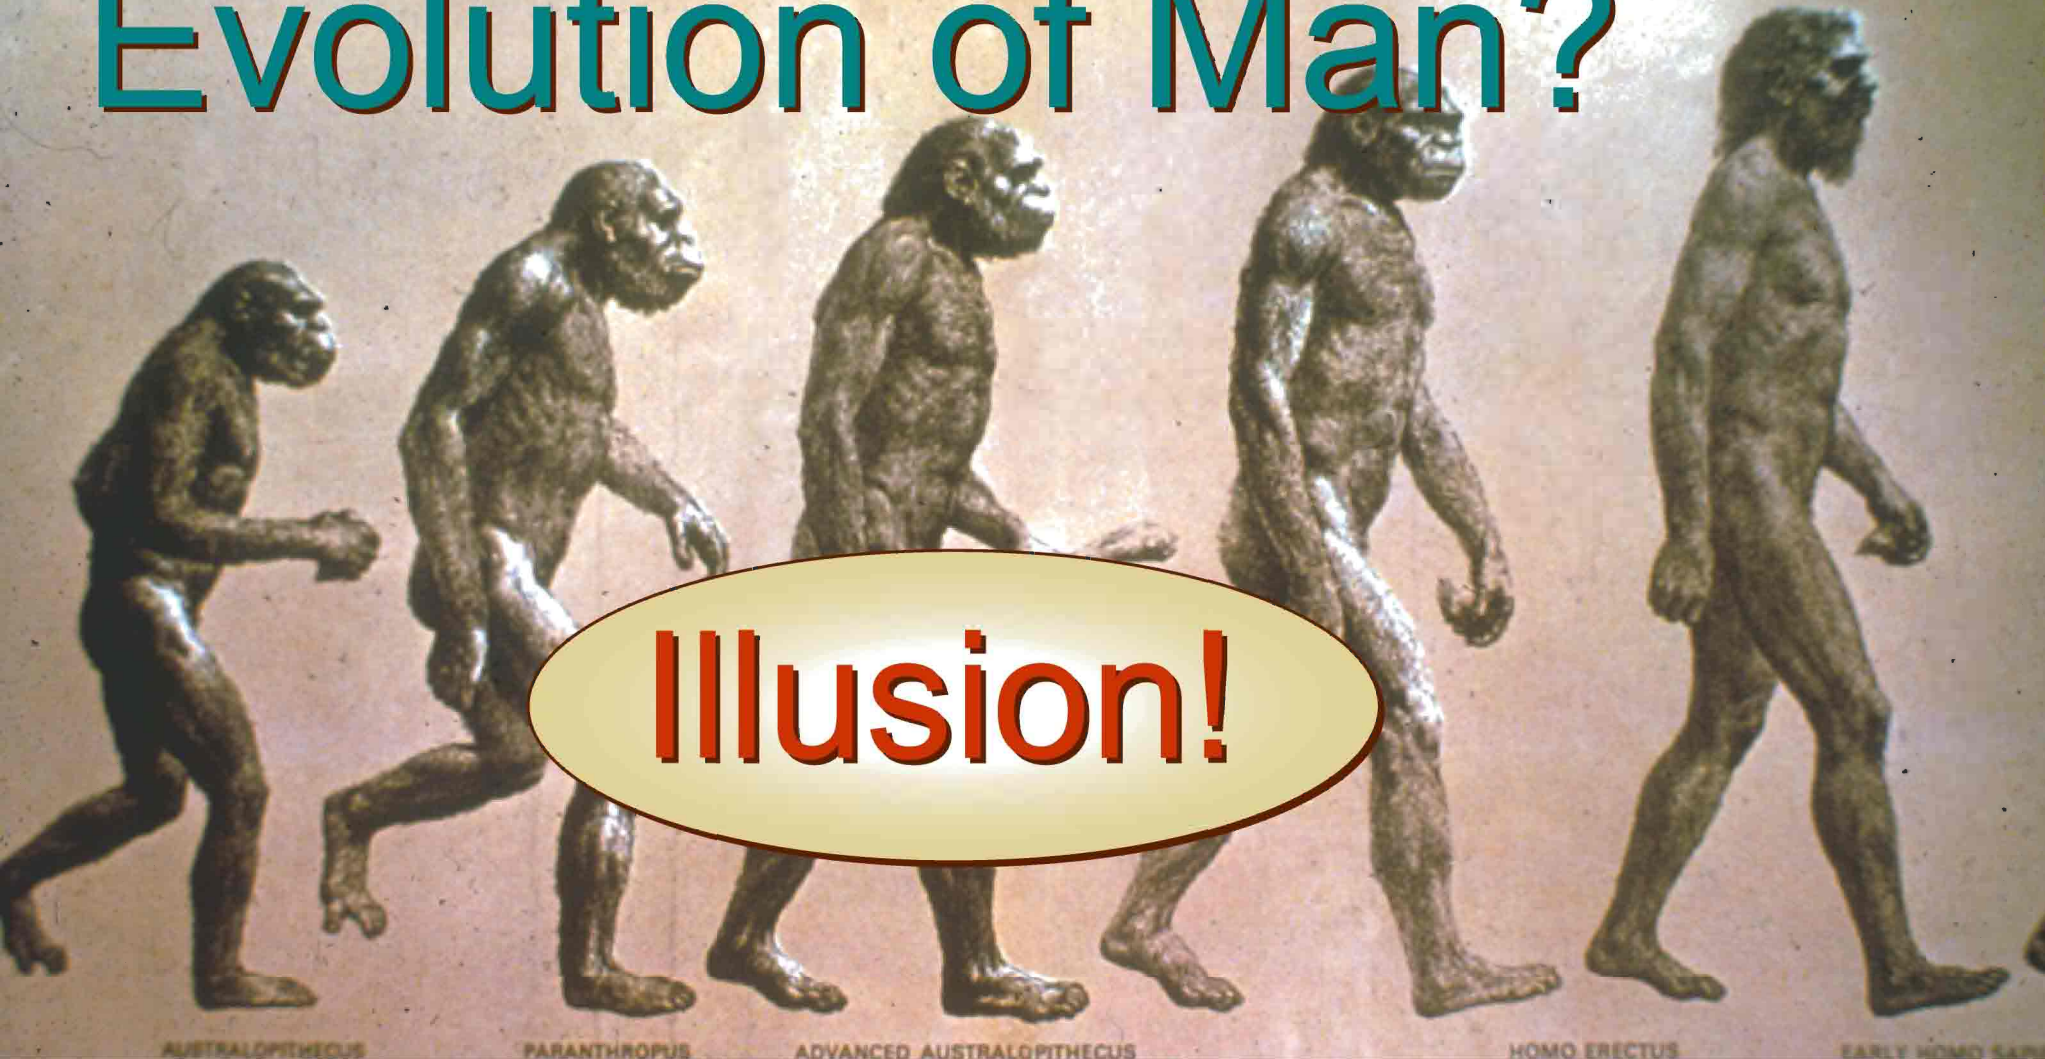

“There is a popular image of human evolution that you’ll find all over the place ... On the left of the picture there’s an ape ... On the right, a man ... Between the two is a succession of figures that become ever more like humans ... Our progress from ape to human looks so smooth, so tidy. It’s such a beguiling image that even the experts are loath to let it go. But it is an illusion.”

Evolution Deception

Contradicting Confab!

Evolutionists say that human beings "evolved" from simple cells entirely by random chance.

But when the word "evolving" is used with technology, it means improvements that are planned, carefully worked out, and implemented using intelligent guidance.

However, when academia uses the word "evolution" in biology, they shift its meaning to deny any planning or intelligent design. Are you being deceived by evolutionists?
